A hurricane is a strong, tropical storm with rotating winds. When winds exceed 74 miles (114 kilometers) per hour, a storm reaches hurricane status. Hurricanes form over warm water. The heat from the surface of the water rises and creates an area of low air pressure. The surrounding high-pressure air moves in and the warm air rises. The colder temperatures above create a strong, steady wind. As the air begins to spin, the storm grows wider and stronger and becomes a hurricane. One of the greatest threats of a hurricane is the storm surge. This is when strong winds push coastal water inland. A storm surge happens quickly and can be several feet high. Most tornadoes develop in supercell thunderstorms when there is a change in wind direction and/or an increase in wind speed. When a warm, rotating updraft (rising air) meets cooler air above, there is a lowering of the cloud base. This creates a wall cloud. Inside the storm, the vortex of warm, spinning air continues to climb. This rotating air mass is called a mesocyclone. Outside, a powerful downdraft of cooler, dense air provides the instability a tornado needs to take shape. As the spinning increases in speed, part of the storm cloud begins to move toward the ground in the shape of a tube or funnel. If it touches down, it becomes a tornado.

Using wind to create energy is becoming more popular because wind energy is renewable. Unlike nuclear power plants, which can be harmful to the planet and also very expensive to run, and oil, which is a limited resource, wind is both free and limitless. It is unlikely the planet will run out of wind! Wind energy is therefore one of the more sustainable forms of power. Currently, 3% of the United States' electric power comes from wind. However, experts are predicting that by 2030, that number will have grown to 20%. Indeed, as people become more conscious about energy consumption, wind farms could become the power of the future!

The idea of government-funded universal basic income (UBI) is not new. In the 1960s, many minorities agreed with Martin Luther King Jr., who called UBI the solution to poverty. With an aging population and the rise of automation, the basic income debate is experiencing a third wave. Governments in Switzerland, Finland, India, and Canada have tried or have considered piloting basic income programs. Perhaps the greatest concern about basic income is affordability. Offering financial security to every citizen comes at a much higher cost than current welfare systems where people have to apply and qualify for aid. Could Bill Gates be onto something? Instead of taxing the rich, Gates suggests taxing companies that replace employees with robots.

Obesity is a public health problem in many nations. Why is obesity increasing? The number one reason is food choice. We know which foods are fattening, but we eat them anyway. Our busy lifestyles are part of the problem. Many people eat fast food because they don't have time to cook. Restaurant food is typically less nutritious than home-cooked food. It is high in sugar and fat and contains less fiber. Another cause of obesity is lack of exercise. We may be busy, but that doesn't mean we're moving. People work at computer desks and sit in cars or on trains. Walking to school or playing sports after work does not fit into our timetable. Obesity isn't only a health problem. It is also an economic concern. Treating diabetes and heart conditions is very costly. Even children require medical attention for obesity. Did you know that an obese person's life expectancy is similar to a smoker's? Obesity cuts off about eight to ten years of one's life.

Honeybees do much more than make honey. They are pollinators that directly and indirectly help bring food to our tables. While we've come to rely on honeybees for our food supply, these pollinators have been dropping like flies since the late 1990s. Bee experts don't know exactly what is causing the rapid decline of honeybees, but most agree that chemicals are largely to blame. The use of pesticides has increased dramatically in recent years. Climate change is another suspect. Extreme weather such as drought can make it difficult for bees to do their job. Loss of habitat is another likely cause. Urban sprawl results in the loss of forests, fields, and meadows. Habitat loss causes malnutrition and disorientation. A bee that can't find its way back to its hive is no use to its colony and dies within a matter of hours.

Marine biologists looked carefully at ocean garbage after Captain Moore's discovery. They found that most of the debris was made of plastic. Over time, sun reduces plastic into tiny pieces called microplastics. This debris is difficult to see with the naked eye. Scientists began studying the effect on marine life. They found that hundreds of thousands of birds and sea creatures were ingesting microplastics and bottle caps. Ingestion of plastics isn't the only hazard of marine trash. Debris reduces the amount of sunlight that shines beneath the ocean's surface. Tiny organisms, such as algae and plankton, rely on the sun for survival. Sadly, today's ocean water samples often contain more plastic than plankton. This results in malnutrition in many different species. Sea creatures also get entangled in our trash.

PARAGRAFLA KELİMELER 2 (DERSLER VE ALIŞTIRMALAR)

PASSAGE-1

Scientists say we are unaware of a massive cause of pollution that is right under our very noses. Everyday household items such as toothpaste, shaving foam, deodorant, perfume and furniture polish contain volatile compounds that help to cause pollution. Dr Brian McDonald, an air-pollution researcher at the US National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, conducted research into how our homes create pollution. His team was surprised to find that household items now contribute as heavily to particular types of air pollution as cars, trucks and other vehicles. Dr McDonald said that as "the transportation sector gets cleaner, these other sources...become more and more important".

The researchers focused on volatile organic compounds (VOCs) in a whole range of household items. VOCs react with sunlight to form ozone pollution. This escapes into the environment and gets trapped in our house or apartment, causing pollution in our homes. The scientists said VOCs interact with other chemicals to form tiny particles in the air. These particles can lead to lung damage. Dr McDonald said governments should regulate household products more tightly to reduce their negative impact on our health. He issued a stark warning, saying: "The things I use in the morning to get ready for work are comparable to emissions that come out of the tailpipe of my car."

1. According to the passage, a headache ____.

- A) often occurs without any reason at all
- B) is a common type of pain and, as such, need not be taken seriously
- C) is never a symptom of a brain tumour
- D) is a prevalent complaint but not as prevalent as backache
- E) can be caused by a wide variety of situations or conditions

2. It is pointed out in the passage that the meninges ____.

- A) are not easily irritated except by a severe head injury
- B) are the primary immediate cause of all the headaches mankind suffers
- C) are sensitive, and they may be the reason why we experience a headache
- D) prevent the brain from receiving any damage
- E) cannot become inflamed unless the skull is seriously damaged

3. It is stressed in the passage that the headache caused by a brain tumour ____.

- A) is by far the worst type of headache known to man
- B) is a sign that the skull has also been affected
- C) arises from lacerations of the brain tissue
- D) bears no relation to any change in the diameter of the inter cranial arteries
- E) does not proceed from the brain itself

Headache, like backache, is one of the commonest types of pain with which mankind is afflicted. It may arise under a diversity of circumstances. A blow to the head causes pain, and after a severe head injury with concussion, headaches may continue for weeks or months. The coverings of the brain, or meninges, are sensitive structures and, when inflamed, as in cases of meningitis, or irritated (as with meningeal haemorrhage), headache may be a prominent feature. The arteries of the brain are also sensitive, and many kinds of headache are referable to arterial disease, more especially to influences which distend the lumen of the arteries, or which distend and then contract the arterial walls. But the brain itself is insensitive and lacerations or gun-shot wounds of the cerebral substance may produce headache only in so far as the bony skull and the meninges are at the same time damaged. Tumours of the brain produce headache, not because the brain tissue is involved, but because the raised intracranial tension alters the diameter of the intracranial arteries.

Some time between 3000 and 2000 BC. a great flood occurred in Mesopotamia. This event had such an effect upon the peoples who lived in that area that several flood myths developed. There are many similarities between them. In all of these myths, there is always a leader who is warned to prepare for a flood. The leader builds a ship, stores the necessities of life on board, and so survives the flood. After the flood he lands safely on a mountainside, and the human race continues. There are small differences in the details of the myths, of course, but the only important difference is the course of the details of the myths, of course, but the only important difference is the cause of the flood. In some myths, the flood comes as a punishment from the gods for man's bad behavior; in others there is no explanation given.

1. As we understand from the passage, the flood that hit ancient Mesopotamia ----.
- put an end to the human race throughout that area.
 - was regarded by all the survivors as a punishment sent by the gods.
 - must have greatly affected very many peoples over a very large area.
 - is not described in any detail in any mythology.
 - was survived by very few people indeed.
2. The writer explains that the most striking similarity between the myths of the flood is ----.
- to be found in the small details
 - that they all give a clear account of the causes of the flood.
 - the detailed description made of the amount of damage caused by the flood.
 - the presence of a wise leader who saves the human race.
 - the explanation given as to why so few people survived.
3. As one can conclude from the passage, if the leader had received no warning of the coming of the flood, ----.
- everyone would have been punished equally by the gods.
 - people would still have found a way to survive.
 - Mesopotamia would have disappeared from the face of the earth.

A former Facebook executive has said social media is doing great harm to society around the world. The executive is a man called Chamath Palihapitiya. He joined Facebook in 2007 and became a vice president. He was responsible for increasing the number of users Facebook had. Mr Palihapitiya said he feels very guilty about getting more people to use social networks. He said the networks are destroying society because they are changing people's behavior. Twenty years ago, people talked to each other face to face. Today, people message each other and do not talk. People also really care about what other people think of them. They post photos and wait to see how many people like the photo. They get very sad if people do not like the photo.

Mr Palihapitiya said people should take a long break from social media so they can experience real life. He wants people to value each other instead of valuing online "hearts, likes, and thumbs-up". Palihapitiya also points out how fake news is affecting how we see the world. It is becoming easier for large websites to spread lies. It is also becoming easier to hurt other people online. Anyone can hide behind a fake user name and post lies about other people. Palihapitiya said this was a global problem. He is worried about social media so much that he has banned his children from using it. However, he did state that Facebook was a good company. He said: "Of course, it's not all bad. Facebook overwhelmingly does good in the world."

Most of us wish to go for the different things which will allow us all to maintain security and one of such method by which you might have security is the UK background checks. There are millions of people in UK who are coming from different nations around the world to work over here but it is have confidence in that you can't trust anyone unless of course you get some perfect report regarding its background and also history of this. The background verify is not only done by any big organization simply but simply by each and every institution who is hiring other people for any task. The actual reasons to perform background checks are to be sure that the new particular person whom you are going to appoint at your workplace is secure or not. This could also allow for the complete security of the life and also property. Thus, go for such background check to preserve security. The background checks UK differs from each other. The actual reports is been prepared by different lawful agencies on the basis of data from private and public database. These reviews would show your actual history and on such basis as it anyone is employed. The security with UK background checks make sure that the data inside the organization is actually confidential. The person who you are hiring at your establishment is also safe and reliable. There exists a necessity to perform background checks UK as it would help you to get information on the candidate's persona. This would additionally give information about his history and the other specifics which would illustrate its actual character.

PASSAGE-2 QUESTIONS

1. We understand from the passage that in UK you can confide in people in the workplace ----

- A) when their background is verified by big organizations
- B) if you know something about their background and history
- C) if the data is safe and reliable
- D) as long as their reports are prepared by different agencies
- E) although you get information about their persona

2. The background verification ----.

- A) is necessary and carried out confidentially by private organizations
- B) can completely illustrate the character of a person who will be appointed at any position
- C) is only used to get information about people coming from different nations
- D) is only done in UK where millions of people come to work
- E) is done both by big organizations and by any institutions who is hiring any person

3. According to the passage, performing background checks ----.

- A) allows for the security of life and property
- B) gives information about the candidate's job experience
- C) is necessary to choose the person suitable for the task
- D) should be reliable and confidential
- E) is important to determine whether the workplace is secure or not

PASSAGE-3 QUESTIONS

1. It is pointed out in the passage that cyanide poisoning ----.

- A) results solely from the use of some cosmetics such as artificial fingernail remover
- B) can be diagnosed very easily, but its treatment takes a long time
- C) has the potential to quickly lead to some very serious complications
- D) has no effect whatsoever on cells and their functions
- E) is rarely related to smoke inhalation

2. According to the passage, in very severe cases of cyanide poisoning, ----.

- A) administration of sodium nitrite may be recommended
- B) hypertension and methemoglobinemia cannot be avoided
- C) various kinds of antidotes can be administered but few are reliable
- D) patients should be put under constant observation to control lactic acidosis
- E) the use of sodium thiosulphate should be completely ruled out

3. It is suggested in the passage that lactic acidosis in patients suffering from smoke inhalation ----.

- A) is the most common cause of cyanide poisoning
- B) can be eliminated through the enzyme called "rhodanese"
- C) can cause the formation of toxic thiocyanate in the body
- D) is one of the indicators of cyanide poisoning
- E) should not be taken as evidence of cyanide poisoning

PASSAGE-3

The most common cause of cyanide poisoning is smoke inhalation. A source to the public is acetonitrile in the form of artificial fingernail remover. Cyanide poisoning produces cellular hypoxia by binding with the ferric iron of mitochondrial cytochrome oxidase, disrupting the electron transport chain and the ability of cells to use oxygen. Patients who inhale cyanide may rapidly develop coma, shock, seizures, lactic acidosis, and respiratory and cardiac arrest. Mild exposures following smoke inhalation are now being described. Diagnosis may be difficult in these patients, and emergency administration of an antidote may be lifesaving. Patients with smoke inhalation who show evidence of lactic acidosis should be suspected of cyanide poisoning. The body has a natural enzyme, called "rhodanese", which can complex cyanide and sulphur to form mildly toxic thiocyanate. Intravenous administration of sodium thiosulphate provides the sulphur necessary to produce thiocyanate and is relatively safe. Sodium nitrite may also be administered, but its use is reserved for the most critical cases only, because it causes hypertension and methemoglobinemia.

PASSAGE-1

The United Kingdom is doing a lot to increase its use of renewable energy. It is moving away from fossil fuels and making more use of green energies, such as wind power, nuclear power and solar energy. New figures from the UK's electricity provider show that the UK had its greenest year ever in 2017 for electricity production. It even had its first coal-free day for over 150 years. The UK broke 13 clean energy records in 2017. In June, wind, nuclear and solar power produced more electricity than gas and coal combined. It was the first time this has ever happened. The UK's power system is now the fourth cleanest in Europe and the seventh cleanest in the world.

The United Kingdom has been trying to reduce the amount of coal it uses. Coal now supplies less than 7 per cent of the UK's electricity. A spokesman said it must now try to use less gas to make sure it meets its target for greenhouse gas emissions. The UK currently uses too much gas. The conservation charity World Wildlife Fund said it was pleased that the UK is moving towards greener energy. It said: "We have never been cleaner or greener, and we are on [target] for an even better year in 2018." It added: "Climate change is wreaking havoc on our nature and wildlife, but we are at last facing up to the challenge. We are turning our backs on polluting fossil fuels and embracing a new, clean future."

1. We can understand from the passage that although women have engaged in the labor, ----.

- A) their domestic activities are also increasing
- B) men have moved into household activities
- C) their household duties are not decreasing
- D) their occupational status are ignored
- E) they have greater responsibility for their husband and children

2. In current societies ----.

- A) women are responsible for domestic activities
- B) men are involved in external activities
- C) the differences between the status of men and women originate from the biological differences between the sexes
- D) appropriate behavior for men and women varies
- E) socially assigned duties of men and women are being shared

3. According to the passage in some countries, such as the United States ----.

- A) there is a comparable reduction in household duties of the women
- B) women still have greater responsibility for household work despite their occupational status
- C) men are also responsible for domestic work
- D) men and women are still assigned traits and tasks on the basis of gender
- E) biological differences between the two sexes are disregarded in the workplace

What is considered appropriate behavior for males and females varies across societies, but there are two possible cultural universals: At least to some degree, every society assigns traits and tasks on the basis of gender, and in no society is the status of women superior to that of men. In virtually all human groups, women have greater responsibility for "domestic" activities while men have greater responsibility for "external" activities. Women are responsible for cooking, food preparation, carrying water, caring for clothing, and making household things, and men are involved with hunting, metalwork, and weapon making, and travel further from home. However, in many cultures these socially assigned duties are now being shared, with men engaging in more domestic activities and women in more external, particularly economic, activities. Nevertheless, even in societies where women have moved actively into the labor force, they have not had a comparable reduction in household duties. In the United States, Switzerland, Sweden, Canada, Italy, Poland, and Romania, the overwhelming majority of household work is performed by women, regardless of their occupational status.

Some underweight people enjoy an active, healthy life, but others are underweight because of smoking habits or poor health. An underweight person, especially an older adult, may be unable to preserve lean tissue during the fight against a wasting disease such as cancer or a digestive disorder, especially when accompanied by malnutrition. Without adequate nutrient and energy reserves, an underweight person will have a particularly tough battle against such medical stresses. In fact, many people with cancer die, not from the cancer itself, but from malnutrition. Underweight women may become infertile. Exactly how infertility develops is unclear, but contributing factors include not only body weight, but also restricted energy and fat intake and depleted body fat stores.

1. The writer points out that infertility in women _____.

- A) may be due to underweight
- B) can always be effectively treated with a balanced diet
- C) follows a distinct pattern as it develops
- D) can lead to a variety of wasting diseases
- E) undermines the body's energy reserves

2. The point is made in the passage that an underweight person _____.

- A) is most probably suffering from cancer
- B) is not necessarily unhealthy
- C) is likely to be a heavy smoker
- D) obviously has poor eating habits
- E) easily develops some form of digestive disorder

3. We learn from the passage that underweight coupled with malnutrition _____.

- A) is rarely found among old people
- B) has a fatal effect among heavy smokers
- C) means that the body finds it difficult to resist a wasting disease
- D) is best treated with a generous intake of fat
- E) has no damaging effect on the body's energy reserves

Scientists have cast new light on the effects our diet has on our mental health. Researchers say what we eat affects and alters our brain chemistry up until the age of 30. They say this explains why older adults are more emotionally stable and resilient than under-30s. The research was conducted by a team led by Lina Begdache, a professor of health and wellness studies. Researchers said that while the link between our diet and diabetes, heart disease and obesity is well established, there is a paucity of research on the influence our dietary intake has on mental health. The researchers also suggested that mental well-being stimulated healthy eating, healthy practices, and exercising.

The research was carried out via an anonymous internet-based survey. It was sent through social media platforms to different professional and social group networks. Professor Begdache found that adults under 30 who ate fast food more than three times a week scored higher on levels of mental distress, anxiety and depression. She said that for adults over 30, the study found that eating less carbohydrates and more fruit reduced anxiety and depression. Begdache pointed to research showing how a Mediterranean diet was as good for our brain as for our body. She said: "It has all the components that are important for the healthy structure of the brain."

The beginning of scientific astronomy in India, based partly on Greek knowledge, dates from about AD 500, during the lifetime of AYABHATA, who introduced the use of sines and other mathematical techniques to the prediction of solar, lunar and planetary positions. These are extrapolated from observations made during his own lifetime. His and other early astronomical writings were written in verse and are exceedingly cryptic in form, which led to later scholars doubting they contained anything of scientific value but modern opinion has removed this doubt. Aryabhata believed that the Earth rotated on its axis once a day, but this view was not accepted by later writers. BRAHMAGUPTA was the other great Indian astronomer of this period, and his works and those of Aryabhata remained influential. At this time Indian astronomy began to spread to other parts of Asia. From the start of the Moghul period in the 16th century, Islamic astronomy gained influence. The Moghul ruler Jai Singh II (1688-1743) had a special interest in Islamic astronomical knowledge. The mammoth instruments he constructed for determining the positions of celestial objects are still standing. Although Western astronomical techniques accompanied the European domination of India, traditional calendars are still in use for astrological and religious purposes, and large numbers of traditional almanacs are published each year.

1. We understand from the passage that scientific astronomy in India ----.

- A) has no scientific value according to scholars
- B) gained influence in Europe and Asia
- C) practiced until Western astronomy became prevalent
- D) base partly on Greek knowledge and began about AD 500
- E) began with the use of solar calendar

2. An Indian astronomer Aryabhata ----.

- A) influenced Brahmagupta and spread astronomy in Asia
- B) had special interest in Western astronomy
- C) believed that the Earth rotates on its axis once a day
- D) developed calendars which are still in use for religious purpose
- E) was a great astronomer whose view about Earth was largely accepted by many scholars

3. We can infer from the passage that contrary to modern opinion, Aryabhata's writings ----.

- A) determined the position of celestial bodies
- B) didn't have any scientific value according to later scholars
- C) didn't contain any mathematical technique and scientific observation
- D) influenced Islamic astronomical knowledge
- E) wiped out all doubts of scholars and writers

1. We learn from the passage that aspirin is a medicine which _____.

- A) can safely be given, in quite large amounts, to all patients including children
- B) is indispensable in the treatment of many serious illnesses
- C) is used not to provide a cure but to give relief
- D) should only be given in very special cases
- E) is particularly disliked by small children

2. It is argued in the passage that children's aspirins _____.

- A) are the safest for children
- B) have proved dangerous
- C) are usually of the insoluble type
- D) are specially designed to relieve headaches
- E) have a long-lasting effect upon the patient's condition

3. The author suggests that children _____.

- A) can be given adult aspirin upon the advice of a doctor
- B) prefer soluble aspirin to flavoured aspirin
- C) frequently suffer from bad headaches
- D) should not be given any medicines including aspirin except in an emergency
- E) recover from a fever more easily than adults do

Aspirin used to be regarded as a safe cure for numerous ills, and was widely used both in its soluble and insoluble form. Now, however, it is not so well thought of. It is useful for the relief of headache or other pains and it will reduce a fever for 2 or 3 hours and so make a patient feel more comfortable, but except in very rare cases it will cure nothing. Moreover, there have been some very serious cases of poisoning as a result of taking aspirin. This is why children's aspirins are not recommended, for they are often nicely flavoured, so the children are tempted to eat them like sweets. For small children, suitably small quantities of ordinary adult soluble aspirin should be used after having checked the dose with the doctor.

The huge surge in the popularity of online shopping is creating chaos on the streets of our cities and on our road networks. As the number of online deliveries is skyrocketing, the number of delivery trucks making sure we get our parcels has also increased. The result is that hundreds more trucks are clogging up city streets. This is increasing congestion and adding to levels of pollution. There are literally hundreds more delivery trucks in cities around the world all trying to get parcels delivered on time. Delivery drivers are battling for often non-existent parking spaces. Many are forced to park illegally, or double park, adding to the gridlock for other road users. And the problem is set to intensify.

The BBC reports that the volume of parcel deliveries surged by almost 50 per cent between 2014 and 2016. It said this could continue to increase by up to 28 per cent a year over the next three years. Many cities have taken tough measures to counteract the problems associated with the increasing number of deliveries. Many cities in Europe and Asia have barred deliveries during times when roads are busiest. London is looking at the possibility of using buses for parcel deliveries. Some areas of London are also cracking down on food delivery motorbikes after their streets were being 'swarmed' by scooter riders. Food delivery companies in one London district must now apply for permission to operate.

1. Non-permanent magnets are appropriate for a variety of applications ----.

- A) even if they rely on an electric current
- B) although they lose their strength when exposed to high heat or electric current
- C) because the strength of their magnetic fields can be varied
- D) excluding communication devices
- E) and, indeed, are far more versatile than are permanent magnets

2. It can be understood from the passage that permanent magnets ----

- A) have magnetic fields that can be varied as needed
- B) are not suitable for use in our ordinary, everyday lives
- C) perform better when exposed to radiation or high temperatures
- D) form domains when they are found in groups
- E) may, in certain circumstances, become weakened

3. According to the passage, electromagnets ----.

- A) have magnetic fields that function in accord with an electric current
- B) are more commonly found than permanent magnets
- C) lose their strength when their domains are nudged out of alignment
- D) may damage the structure of such instruments as telephone receivers
- E) have domains that are usually out of alignment

4. It can be understood from the passage that domains in permanent magnets ----.

- A) become stronger in higher levels of heat or radiation
- B) cannot produce a magnetic field when they are locked in a crystalline structure
- C) align the magnetic fields in a single direction
- D) are what give these magnets their attractive force
- E) cannot be altered by outward circumstances

The magnets that are used most commonly, such as the ones on compasses, those used for fridge decorations, and in many other everyday tools, are called permanent magnets. This type of magnet produces an external magnetic field that attracts or repels iron, and it may lose its strength when mistreated. Inside a magnet are groups of atoms called domains. The magnetizing process, which exposes a material to increasingly strong magnetic fields, aligns these domains in a single direction, where they become locked in a crystalline structure. High heat, radiation, strong electrical currents, or other nearby magnets, though, can damage that structure, nudging the domains out of alignment and diminishing the attractive force. Electromagnets, or non-permanent magnets, a less familiar type, have magnetic fields that rely on an electric current. They, thus, do not lose their strength; instead, the strength of the field can be varied as needed. This makes them appropriate for various applications, such as telephone receivers.

For many years whooping cough has been regarded merely as a bother to the patient and a nuisance to others; as, in fact, a trivial disease. Unfortunately; this is not so: because statistics show that it has caused more deaths than polio, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and measles put together. Whooping cough begins in a child as an ordinary cold with cough and slight fever, and this stage lasts for a week or ten days. Then begins a series of coughs following in rapid succession, during which time, the patient is unable to breathe. The "whoop" is caused by the noisy in drawing of breath when the fit stops. The face may become blue and congested. Bronchitis is usually present, and bronchopneumonia may result as a complication, so inoculation of all children before the disease has a chance to strike them is most important.

1. The writer points out that formerly whooping cough ____.

- A) was taken more seriously than scarlet fever
- B) was far more wide-spread than any of the other infectious diseases
- C) could be treated but not prevented
- D) rarely lasted for more than ten days
- E) was considered to be an unimportant children's disease

2. We understand from the passage that the main immediate problem caused by whooping cough in a patient is ____.

- A) the lasting damage it causes in the lungs
- B) a dangerously high temperature
- C) the inevitable development of bronchopneumonia
- D) its adverse effect on breathing
- E) that it results in physical weakness which exposes the patient to other diseases

3. The important point made by the writer in this passage is that ____.

- A) the cause of whooping cough has only recently been fully understood
- B) inoculation is vital for the prevention of whooping cough
- C) such diseases as polio and measles always used to cause more deaths than whooping cough
- D) bronchitis can also be controlled through inoculation
- E) basically healthy children rarely catch infectious diseases

When doom-and-gloom merchants warn us about threats to our existence, we usually hear about climate change, asteroid strikes or nuclear war. Now scientists have warned of the potential threat from Earth's magnetic poles flipping upside down. The North Pole and South Pole are responsible for creating a special barrier around Earth that protects us from killer radiation from space. All life on Earth depends on this shield. Without it, scientists say solar rays could cause considerable damage. The poles could flip in the next thousand years. This is because a rolling layer of liquid iron under the earth's crust is changing direction. The revolving currents of this molten iron at Earth's center act as a gigantic electromagnet.

Historically, Earth's North and South magnetic poles have flipped every 200,000 to 300,000 years. The last time was 780,000 years ago, so the next flip is well overdue. Some scientists say the flip could destroy satellite communications and power grids; that dangerous solar rays would greatly multiply rates of cancer; and that climate change could kill billions of creatures. Some scientists forewarn that a polar flip could even blow Earth's atmosphere away. However, one scientist dismissed the doom-mongers. He believes that the effects of any increase in radiation would be as harmful as lying on a hot beach for a day. He suggested a "floppy hat" would be enough to protect us from any increased radiation.

Combined active and passive prophylactic immunisation is designed to obtain both the immediate but temporary benefit of protection: afforded by serum and the more remote but lasting benefit afforded by vaccine injection. It has been used chiefly in diphtheria. If, for example, this disease breaks out in a school, a small dose of serum, such as 500 antitoxic units, may be injected at once into all the children, and a first dose of diphtheria prophylactic vaccine given simultaneously. A second dose of vaccine is administered four weeks later. The serum confers passive protection during the time that active immunity is developing. Since the main effect of the serum passes off in 3-4 weeks and active immunity is not established for 5-6 weeks, there may be a short intermediate period of relative susceptibility, but it has been found in practice that, provided the children are protected from infection by temporary segregation of carriers, there is very little risk of diphtheria breaking out again. An outbreak can thus be brought to an abrupt end.

1. We understand from the passage that the protection afforded by serum injection _____.

- A) should only be considered in exceptional conditions
- B) is immediately effective but short-termed
- C) is unreliable and can have an adverse effect on the patient
- D) lasts long and is entirely safe
- E) has generally proved unsuccessful except during diphtheria epidemics

2. The passage gives a detailed account of _____.

- A) how to determine who the carriers are in an outbreak of diphtheria
- B) the special advantages of active prophylactic immunisation
- C) an immunisation programme specially designed to deal with an outbreak of diphtheria in a school
- D) the various symptoms of diphtheria and the treatment called for at different stages of the disease
- E) the stages through which diphtheria develops into an epidemic

3. The author suggests that, in an outbreak of diphtheria in a school it is wise to keep carriers away from the other children _____.

- A) since this will make the treatment more effective
- B) even if there are very few of them
- C) even if this means closing the school
- D) otherwise they will all become re-infected
- E) especially in the period just before active immunity commences

1. It is stated in the passage that for thousands of years believers ----.

- A) express their common identity and belongings
- B) can dance either for career or for moving in rhythm
- C) dance as a prayer for rain, fertility of crops and the success in war and hunting
- D) think that dance help them recognize their connection to their ancestors
- E) create new dances such as rock dancing, twist and enjoy dancing simply for entertainment

2. It is accepted that dance ----.

- A) is regarded as an art, a social activity and a way of communication
- B) takes place at ceremonial occasions and gatherings
- C) is among the oldest human art forms
- D) is free-spirited and individual
- E) allows people to create their own steps spontaneously

3. In Christian worship ----.

- A) dance was used as a part of a religious ritual
- B) dance was a formal element and was prohibited by religious leaders until A.D 1100
- C) dancers imitate the movement of an animal to be haunted or a hunter's actions
- D) dance differs from other kinds of rhythmic movement
- E) danced played an important role in social functions

Dance is the movement of the human body in a rhythmic way. Dance serves many functions in human society. It is an art form, a social activity, a type of communication, and a form of recreation. For thousands of years, human beings have danced for religious reasons. Many religions involve some form of dance. Many religious dances are forms of prayer. Believers dance as they pray for rain, for the fertility of crops, and for success in war or in hunting. Such dances often imitate or pantomime some movement. For example, dancers may imitate the movement of the animal to be hunted, or a hunter's actions in stalking it. They may wear elaborate costumes and masks or makeup to depict deities or animals. Religious dance also may attempt to create a state of ecstasy (intense joy) or trance in the worshiper. Dance may also be used as one part of a religious occasion or ritual. One example is the dancing of Jews at the festival of Simhat Torah. Another example is the dancing and whirling of members of a Muslim religious order called dervishes. Dancing was a formal element in Christian worship until the A.D. 1100's, when religious leaders began to prohibit it because they believed it was too worldly an activity. However, spontaneous dance has become a common element of worship among some Protestant denominations

Scientists from two of the USA's elite universities have pioneered a new method of creating artificial muscles. The scientists have dubbed their discovery as a "soft robot". It is a 2.6-gram "muscle" that looks like a small bag with many water-filled compartments. It has been given amazing strength by supporting it with an origami-inspired structural framework. This allows the artificial muscle to lift an object that is 1,000 times its own weight. The New Scientist website said this weight-to-strength ratio is the equivalent of a newborn baby lifting a large 4WD car. The ground-breaking discovery could greatly benefit many areas of science, medicine, robotics and engineering.

The scientists are from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University. They are experts in the field of soft robotics. They said their new soft robot muscle can be made in just 10 minutes and costs less than one dollar. Researcher, professor Robert Wood, hopes to create "softer" robots that are more similar to humans. He said: "Humans are normally soft and brittle compared to the big industrial robots that you might find on an assembly line. The next step is to take this system and develop it into a fully functional robot." Dr Daniela Rus explained that the robots could be like the human hand. They could be strong enough to grip any object firmly, while being soft and gentle.

1. According to the passage, when a new baby in the family becomes the centre of the mother's attention, the older child ____.

- A) will also shower him with attention
- B) is likely to feel he has been displaced and react accordingly
- C) usually welcomes him warmly into the family circle
- D) is usually terribly pleased at first, but later doubts start to develop
- E) will generally be delighted with the new member of the family if he has been sensibly prepared for his coming

2. It is clear from the passage that the arrival of a new baby into a family ____.

- A) invariably makes an older child feel unloved and unwanted
- B) invariably makes the first child exceedingly jealous
- C) results in the older one automatically reverting to baby ways
- D) may have a positive effect or a negative one on the development of the older child
- E) is sure to be a joyful event for the older child

3. We understand from the passage that many children react with some degree of jealousy when there is a new baby ____.

- A) but this need not be taken seriously
- B) and this gradually intensifies as the months go by
- C) but this phase soon passes if the child is receiving adequate love and attention
- D) and one sign is a rapid advance forward in social skills
- E) but this could have been avoided if the child had been better prepared for the event

The birth of a younger infant whilst an older child is in the toddler or pre-school period is such a normal event that the proper handling of the situation should be regarded as an integral part of childcare. Put in its simplest terms, the problem is one of the older child being displaced by the new baby as the centre of attention and focus of his mother's affection. Such a displacement is inevitable, but its effects on the older child can either be helpful to his development (as when he accepts the baby with pleasure into his family circle and so takes a step forward from the egotism of babyhood) or harmful when jealousy predominates over any pleasure in having a brother or sister and the child becomes hostile to his mother and more demanding of her attention, returning to many of the practices of babyhood which he had outgrown. Thus a child or three or four may demand to sleep in his old cradle, to take milk from the bottle or breast, to be constantly carried, or may restart wetting the bed. Any or all of these symptoms may appear transiently in a child who subsequently adapts well to the new situation, but when they persist they indicate that the child is receiving less attention and affection than he needs.

In 1786 Sir William Jones, a British judge serving in India, made a discovery that transformed knowledge about prehistory and began the formal study of historical linguistics. Turning his spare time towards the study of Sanskrit, the ancient language from which the predominant languages of the South Asian subcontinent derive, Jones discovered that Sanskrit shares features of grammar and vocabulary with Latin and ancient Greek to an extent inexplicable by sheer coincidence. His interest further aroused, he then examined the early Germanic language called "Gothic", the ancient Celtic languages of Europe, and Old Persian, and found that they, too, exhibited marked similarities to Sanskrit. He concluded that all these languages must have evolved from a common but now-extinct linguistic source. In the early nineteenth century, both this ancient language and the later languages that derived from it, were labelled "Indo-European," reflecting their wide distribution from India and Ireland.

1. One can conclude from the passage that Gothic ----.
A) originally derived from Latin and had the same grammatical features
B) had no relationship whatsoever with Sanskrit and other languages
C) was an old language which was spoken throughout Europe, including Ireland
D) was the only language in which Sir William Jones took a special interest
E) was the language spoken by early Germanic peoples
2. It is pointed out in the passage that Sanskrit ----.
A) is the only language which is widely spoken among the peoples of South Asia
B) and other Indo-European languages are closely related with each other
C) was first studied by Sir William Jones in the eighteenth century
D) was the most ancient language from which Latin and Greek have evolved
E) has a grammatical structure which is entirely different from that of Old Persian
3. As one understands from the passage, Sir William Jones ----.
A) made fundamental changes in the judicial system of eighteenth-century India
B) was a professional linguist and spent his time in India by the study of Sanskrit
C) rejected the view that the European Celtic languages derived from a common source
D) studied Sanskrit only when he was free from his judicial responsibilities
E) was very interested in the prehistory of India and made several discoveries

1. It is pointed out in the passage that, particularly in the manufacturing industries, _____.
A) the teams are unable to organize themselves so management has to help them
B) the rotation of jobs within the team has slowed down the work
C) workers have perfect satisfaction with assembly line conditions
D) great efforts are being made to provide the workers with more job satisfaction
E) workers are demanding for higher salaries since they are being given more responsibilities
2. It can be understood from the passage that in several factories the assembly line is _____.
A) still being protected because it is the ideal educational ground for new workers
B) still used especially when procedures are complicated
C) becoming more favourable since the workers find the work less demanding and easier
D) felt to yield a higher standard of product
E) being replaced by teams of workers who assemble a whole product or at least a whole unit
3. It is obvious from the passage that, under the new teamwork system, the workers _____.
A) carry more responsibility theoretically, but not in practice
B) have more responsibility and get fully involved in the decision-making process related to their work
C) require a more thorough training period
D) find they can work faster than they expected to
E) have the opportunity to be promoted and even become managers

When job satisfaction, especially in manufacturing industries, is lost, some serious social problems rise. Managers in many industrial countries are seriously considering various projects aimed at 'job enrichment' so as to solve these problems. There are some attempts to reverse recent trends by enlarging the role and responsibilities of the workers. Several factories have tried to abolish the assembly line by organising production again so that teams of workers are responsible for assembling the entire or a major component of a product. Each team can freely decide how the various tasks will be distributed and the speed the job is carried out. In every team the jobs may be rotated to in order increase variety in the work done.

Gingivitis is the inflammation of the gums. Under this condition, the gums become red and swollen and bleed easily. An extremely common condition, gingivitis can develop any time after a person's teeth come in, and it is almost always the result of inadequate brushing and flossing, which allows plaque to remain along the gumline of the teeth. Plaque, which is a soft, sticky film made up primarily of bacteria, accumulates especially in faulty fillings and around the teeth next to poorly cleaned partial dentures, bridges, and orthodontic appliances. When plaque stays on the teeth for more than 72 hours, it hardens into tartar, which can't be completely removed by brushing and flossing. Although plaque is the main cause of gingivitis, other factors can make the inflammation worse, especially pregnancy, puberty, and birth control drugs.

1. It is pointed out in the passage that gingivitis ----.

- A) in women usually develops only when birth control drugs are taken
- B) is rare, even when the teeth are not brushed properly
- C) can increase in severity due to various factors
- D) is generally seen in grown-ups rather than children and young people
- E) can be treated most effectively through efficient flossing

2. As explained in the passage, tartar ----.

- A) is a major factor that causes bleeding along the gumline of the teeth
- B) forms around the teeth if plaque is not removed within three days
- C) generally results from faulty fillings and unflossed partial dentures
- D) is best removed from the teeth through frequent flossing
- E) can be effectively prevented by the use of suitable orthodontic appliances

3. It is stressed in the passage that, even as early as childhood, ----.

- A) a great majority of people understand the bad effects of plaque
- B) people should be taught how to brush their teeth
- C) many people become aware of the importance of flossing
- D) some people know how to get rid of tartar
- E) people may suffer from gingivitis

1. It is clear that the writer of the article thinks that ____.

- A) Shakespeare's best play is Henry V
- B) Shakespeare would probably be in the film industry if he were living now
- C) modern audiences prefer stage productions of Shakespeare's plays to films of them
- D) Branagh's films are far too experimental
- E) Japan is an ideal country for filming Shakespeare's plays

2. We understand from the passage that Branagh is of the opinion that films of Shakespeare's plays have the advantage over stage productions ____.

- A) because they are in a medium audiences are familiar with
- B) since they can add more power and excitement to the background
- C) as the plays have constant scene changes
- D) but the writer of the passage disagrees with him
- E) especially when the aim is to modernize them

3. According to the passage, Shakespeare's play As You Like It ____.

- A) established Branagh as a famous actor
- B) is the only Shakespearean play to be set in Japan
- C) is Branagh's first attempt at filming a Shakespearean play
- D) is the one Branagh is presently making into a film
- E) is one of the less popular of Shakespeare's comedies

PASSAGE-3

If Shakespeare were alive today, he'd probably be writing movies. And Kenneth Branagh would probably direct them. Branagh is a celebrated stage actor who took his love of Shakespeare into filmmaking. Altogether, he has made six of the plays into films, starting with the award-winning Henry V in 1989. "The stories that Shakespeare writes, about kings and queens, the fates of nations and very powerful domestic dramas, are written at an intensity that can be presented in a bold and heightened way through film", he says. "In the theatre, the words and the performances are the same, but film does it in a language people are more familiar with". In As You Like It, the film he is working on now, Branagh transfers the action to 19th century Japan, where romance blossoms against the country's tranquil landscapes. This new setting speaks to modern audiences because, Branagh says, the play is partly about "the idea of the simple life, that feeling of getting out of the terrible competition of city life and being somewhere quiet, meditative and transformative."

PASSAGE-1

An important characteristic of entrepreneurs is that they often take financial risks. Most production activities are undertaken in prediction of demand. Companies will produce those goods which they think will yield a profit they do not know that they will do so, because the future is not known. Entrepreneurs must bear the costs involved during the time which passes between the decision to produce and the final marketing of the product. They must pay rent for their land, interest on the money borrowed, wages to labour and meet the costs of materials used. These payments must be made without any certainty that such costs will be covered by receipts. If the income from sales exceeds their expenses, they will make a profit - if not, they must bear the loss. The risks they bear arise from uncertainty. Economic conditions are constantly changing and past experience is not necessarily any good guide to future prospects.

1. The main point of the passage is that the entrepreneurs _____.
 - A) can never be certain that any product will succeed until it has actually done so
 - B) are prepared to pay a high interest on the money they borrow
 - C) make a loss as often as they make a profit
 - D) soon become a good judge of economic issues and hardly make a mistake
 - E) are sound businessmen and don't bear risks
2. According to the passage, a lot of expenses must be met by the entrepreneurs _____.
 - A) and these expenses increase rapidly as soon as the product is on the market
 - B) and they are very seldom offered a credit
 - C) but they are sure that their profits will exceed their expenses
 - D) before a particular product is even brought into the market
 - E) but the biggest one is labour costs
3. We can infer from the passage that the success or failure of a product _____.
 - A) becomes clear only after it has gone onto the market
 - B) is always a matter of luck indeed
 - C) is firmly related to the quality of the materials used
 - D) can be fairly accurately judged shortly after it goes into production
 - E) is of very little importance to experienced entrepreneurs

1. We learn from the passage that the International Labour Organization (ILO) was established in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles _____.
 - A) to gather statistical evidence relating to various approaches to social justice
 - B) as a party of the attempt to make a permanent and all-inclusive peace
 - C) in the hope of getting people to vote and act independently of their governments
 - D) with an aim to establish good relations between employers and governments
 - E) to finance research into working conditions all over the world
2. It is pointed out in the passage that, as an international organization, the International Labour Organization is extremely unusual _____.
 - A) because it has an ever-increasing membership, particularly, of the developing nations
 - B) as it is given the permission to investigate social conditions worldwide even among non-member countries
 - C) as some delegates do not represent their governments at the meetings but participate and vote independently
 - D) because all member countries have to send at least four delegates to all meetings, and more if they want
 - E) since its sources of income vary and mostly consist of the contributions made by industrialized countries
3. It is clearly indicated in the passage that one of the functions of the ILO has always been _____.
 - A) to stimulate the employer and employee representatives to stand up against their governments
 - B) to train the labour force in the principles of social justice
 - C) to make labour more informed about its international rights
 - D) the collecting of data concerning social conditions worldwide and the sharing of this knowledge
 - E) the development of the same working conditions throughout the member nations

The International Labour Organization (ILO) was brought into being in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles, in the idea 'that universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice'. In July 1961 it reached 100 member countries including all the great powers. A unique feature of the ILO is that its meetings are attended not only by representatives of governments, but also by those of employers and workpeople as well, and these participate in the proceedings by voice and by vote, independently of their governments. The major policy-making body, for example, consists of four delegates from each member state and of these two represent the government. One represents employers and one employee. From the very beginning, the organization has taken steps to collect full and up-to-date information about work and social conditions throughout the world and to pass on the results to member states in the form of statistics and reports.

The question of 'how to fit the job to the man' starts with planning methods of work. At this point the industrial psychologist's major interest is to see that they are planned with due regard for the capacities and inclinations of the people who must use them. More specifically, his objectives are to make sure that methods of work are closely related to the range of 'tolerance' of the workers available to do them, and that appreciable fluctuations in these ranges (caused by, for instance, changes in the work supply) are recognized and allowed for. He doesn't make any claim to allround competence in planning methods of work: his only role is collaborative. Administrators, engineers and physiologists are usually his fellow planners; but this is only because the majority of systematic and detailed inquiries into methods of work occur in occupations related to industrial activities.

1. The main point of this passage is _____.

- A) to solve the special problems of a labour force that operates machines
- B) to set down and explain the aims of the industrial psychologist
- C) to advise administration on how to organize and run a work force
- D) the insufficiency of respect industrial psychologists receive from engineers
- E) the methods of training a labour force in industry

2. We learn from the passage that the industrial psychologist _____.

- A) is not responsible for designing work systems, but he advises on them regarding worker 'tolerance'
- B) is expected to give advice to administration on the promotion of the labor force
- C) cannot be blamed even if there are slight fluctuations in output in factories
- D) is supposed to cater to the wishes of administration but not to those of the labor force
- E) is responsible for any redundancy that may arise from his advice as an efficiency expert

3. It is obvious from the passage that the industrial psychologist is usually consulted _____.

- A) when a lot of unrest is noticed in the labour force
- B) when work is in very short supply
- C) in work places where industrial activities take place
- D) since administrators and engineers cannot agree if certain methods are suitable
- E) as there is disagreement between managers and physiologists

The bento is a very common part of Japanese cuisine. It is a ready-made meal in a box for one person. People buy it from convenience stores and railway stations. Japanese mothers and wives often spend a lot of time carefully preparing a bento lunch box for their husband or children. Bentos are usually cheap and contain a healthy mix of rice or noodles, fish or meat, and pickled and cooked vegetables. Now, a new bento is on the market that does not match our traditional image of this lunch box. The new bento is from Tottori and contains only premium cuts of the country's highest-quality wagyu beef. It is a little more expensive than the average 600 yen for a bento, as it costs 292,929 yen ($3,000).

Tottori is in the west of Japan's Honshu island. Its wagyu beef was recently rated as the best in all of Japan. It is also very expensive. The new Tottori Wagyu Complete Cow bento box contains 4.5kg of beef, Tottori-grown rice and wasabi, and a special dipping sauce flavored with Tottori's famous pears, but no vegetables. The actual bento box is also more expensive than normal bento boxes. It is 60 centimeters long and is made from wood instead of plastic. The compartments in the box are in the shape of a cow. In Japan, you can buy the beefy bento online from the bento delivery service Gochikuru. However, you may have to wait two weeks for the company to prepare your meaty lunch.

PASSAGE-2

Glucose, nature's most abundant sugar, may soon be petroleum's fiercest rival. Chemists have long searched for cheap, renewable, and non-polluting alternatives to the 245 million tones of petroleum based plastics produced annually. For years, they have been able to convert sugars into the chemical hydroxymethylfurfural (HMF), which can be used to make plastic. But the process, which used acid catalysts to break the sugars down, was costly and complicated by impurities and low yields. Researchers at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNLL) in Washington replaced the acid catalyst with a metal catalyst, chromium chloride, and used it to break down glucose, a sugar found in plant starches and cellulose. The result: HMF yields increased 10 to 70 percent over the old processes and impurities were eliminated. The next step to replacing petroleum is to find a low-impact renewable source for the glucose. Scientists hope to soon obtain glucose from cellulose rather than from plant starches. Cellulose is found in straw and sawdust, two waste products from the agricultural and wood industries that do not require precious farmland to be taken away from food crops.

1. It can be understood from the passage that cellulose ----.
- requires an extensive use of farmland
 - is generally extracted from plant starches
 - can be derived from any kind of agricultural waste product
 - is not the first choice of the researchers at PNLL
 - is a more environmentally friendly option than are plant starches
2. According to the passage, scientists have, for years, used acid catalysts to ----.
- get rid of impurities in plastics
 - convert sugar into HMF
 - increase yields
 - extract cellulose from plants
 - make plastics from petroleum
3. We can understand from the passage that the use of metal catalysts ----.
- caused a decline in yield, and an increase in cost
 - is more expensive than using acid catalysts
 - is a more efficient way of breaking down glucose than is the use of acid catalysts
 - resulted in impurities in plastics
 - involves the use of HMF
4. The passage mainly deals with ----.
- a new and efficient way of producing plastic from petroleum
 - different types of catalysts used in the production of plastics
 - the environmental advantages of using plastics made from glucose
 - ways of increasing yield in the production of plastics
 - a new alternative to petroleum in plastic production

1. We understand from the passage that when thalidomide was first developed in the late 1950s it looked safe ____.
- so there was no need for extensive animal testing
 - even though the testing results were controversial
 - so long as it was used in reasonable quantities
 - except in the case of pregnant women
 - because chemically it was very similar to drugs already long in use
2. We understand from the passage that the tragic thalidomide experience ____.
- has forced drug companies to make drug testing even more rigorous
 - has turned people against drug testing on animals
 - was solely confined to Britain
 - actually affected very few people indeed
 - put many well-known drug companies out of business
3. The passage in effect is saying that the testing of thalidomide on animals ____.
- showed that it could cause physical defects
 - was carried out by incompetent people
 - produced controversial results
 - included its effect on foetal development
 - mised people into believing it was a perfectly safe drug

Thalidomide was unique. In every animal test used in the late 1950s, it had a clean bill of health. It was chemically related to other drugs which had been in use for a long time. Over-dosage with thalidomide was unlikely to prove fatal. It was marketed in Europe and in Britain as a "safe sedative". The tragic results that followed its use by women in the early weeks of pregnancy are how well known. Babies were born with severe deformities of limbs, internal organs or both. That effect could not have been foretold from any animal tests in use at that time. Since that date new drugs have been subjected to strict testing in various animal species to check the effect on foetal development, along with the older tests for toxicity which had always been undertaken by well-known drug companies.

The amount and brightness of light from towns and cities around the world is at such a high level that it is reducing the darkness of night. Once upon a time, when night-time fell, we were plunged into darkness. Things are different, and brighter today. A study published in the journal Science Advances reports that artificial light at night is increasing in most countries worldwide. Scientists say it grew by 2.2 per cent a year between 2012 and 2016. The intrusion of artificial light into our night-time is causing us many problems. The International Dark-Sky Association says it, "is not only impairing our view of the universe, it is adversely affecting our environment, our safety, our energy consumption and our health".

Study co-author Franz Holker said artificial light is a threat to our natural environment. He said: "Artificial light is an environmental pollutant that threatens nocturnal animals and affects plants and microorganisms." He added: "[It] has ecological and evolutionary implications for many organisms from bacteria to mammals, including us humans, and may reshape entire social ecological systems." Many environmentalists thought the introduction of LED lights would help the planet. However, cities are using more LED lights because they are cheaper, which is adding to the light pollution. Night-time light decreased in 16 countries, including war-torn nations such as Yemen and Syria.

Teaching might seem like an easy profession but in reality it is a very stressful job that requires your ultimate attention and concentration all the time. You need to have a variety of plans to make kids understand the concepts that you teach them. Primary school teachers possess the toughest job within their hands because they have to teach kids who've sharp minds and may absorb things readily. These teachers need to keep their teaching plans and activates up to date to keep the students indulged in different interesting and educational work. There are many websites for the primary school teachers. These websites have a lot of guides and teaching plans together with various unique ideas. They give primary resources which are today helping teachers and help them to understand the psychology of all the various students in a class in such a way that they can hold the topic immediately and therefore are comfortable enough to inquire about questions in the event of misunderstanding. They also have detailed discussions and descriptions on every subject that's being taught in primary schools. Many of these websites are free of cost and all sorts of you have to do is register yourself as a user and you'll get a guide emailed for you immediately. In this way when you have any type of issue or block inside your teaching plan you are able to consult the website for making lesson plans that are creative, simple and easy, comprehensive.

1. We can understand from the passage that in reality ----.

- A) teachers should keep their plans all the time
- B) many websites supply teachers many resources
- C) teaching process requires various plans and ideas
- D) teaching is a difficult job that always needs concentration
- E) teaching students having sharp minds is the most difficult job

2. Primary school teachers ----.

- A) can easily understand the psychology of their students
- B) should have teaching plans and keep the students active
- C) describe every subject in a detailed way in order to avoid misunderstanding
- D) can't prepare creative lesson plans but for websites
- E) usually experience stress

3. It is stated in the passage that websites ----.

- A) are free and you don't have to register yourself
- B) can be used only by the primary school teachers
- C) are usually consulted by the students to do their homework
- D) can destroy young minds absorbing things readily
- E) have a lot of resources, teaching plans, detailed discussions and descriptions

Cardiac transplantation, once considered an experimental procedure, has emerged as the therapy of choice for many appropriately selected patients with life-threatening irremediable heart disease. Congestive heart failure (CHF), the primary indication for cardiac transplantation, is the most commonly reported reason for hospital admission. A knowledge of cardiac transplantation medicine is therefore important for all physicians, as transplantation should be considered a therapeutic option for many of these patients. In the past, post-cardiac transplant care was largely performed by specialized transplant physicians, primarily cardiologists and cardiovascular surgeons. As survival after cardiac transplantation has improved markedly over the last decade, the population of patients who are long-term survivors after heart transplantation has grown. Primary care physicians, as well as cardiologists not based at cardiac transplant centres, often assist in the care of these patients, most often in consultation with cardiac transplant physicians. In addition, a physician may be called on to assist in the management and evaluation of a potential cardiac donor.

1. According to the passage, in recent years ----.

- A) almost every patient with heart disease has come to recognize cardiac transplantation as an indispensable therapeutic option
- B) more and more patients with CHF have chosen to undergo cardiac transplantation
- C) the number of cardiac transplant centres in the world has increased due to advances in cardiac transplantation
- D) there has been a noticeable improvement in the survival of post-cardiac transplant patients
- E) cardiologists and cardiovascular surgeons have been engaged in extensive research for the improvement of post-cardiac transplant care

2. We learn from the passage that, to start with, cardiac transplantation ----.

- A) was an experimental procedure rather than a therapy
- B) was carried out on every patient with CHF
- C) had a very low success-rate indeed
- D) could only be practised at special cardiac transplant centres
- E) was generally regarded with disapproval in the medical world

3. It is pointed out in the passage that cardiac transplant physicians ----.

- A) are no longer involved in post-cardiac transplant care
- B) are often assisted in post-cardiac transplant care by primary care physicians
- C) are the only ones qualified to select cardiac donors
- D) are still experimenting in developing an improved method of cardiac transplantation
- E) are primarily affiliated with cardiac transplant centres outside hospital

Scientists are highlighting the damage that glitter does to our seas, oceans and environment. The scientists are calling for a worldwide ban on the sparkly, shiny pieces of plastic that decorate everything from eyelids to greetings cards to furniture. Scientists from New Zealand's Massey University say glitter is a micro-plastic and should therefore be banned. They say a considerable amount of glitter ends up in the world's oceans. Fish cannot digest it and it does not break down, so it stays in the food chain. Professor Richard Thompson conducted research in the seas around the United Kingdom. He found that plastic particles were discovered in about one-third of the fish caught.

Micro-plastics are tiny pieces of plastic that are less than five millimeters long. Most glitter produced around the world falls into the category of micro-plastics. Dr Trisia Farrelly told Britain's "Independent" newspaper: "I think all glitter should be banned because it's a micro-plastic." Professor Thompson said: "I was quite concerned when somebody bought my daughters some shower gel that had glitter particles in it. That stuff is going to escape down the plughole and potentially enter the environment." Some cosmetics companies are now discontinuing their use of plastic glitter. The company Lush stated: "We've avoided micro-plastics by switching to synthetic and mineral glitter."

Financial planning is a significant aspect of a person's life and financial planners should be chosen as carefully as a doctor or a dentist. A financial planner is required by any person who has specific plans for their money and would like to achieve financially ambitious goals. This ranges from young entrepreneurs investing their money to college kids deciding on college loans and their payments. This also includes a person who is thinking about investing in market shares but does not have time to keep an eye on the stock market day and night. If you need a financial planner, avoid getting involved with a planner who is completely new to you. Ask around from people if they know anyone they trust in financial planning. Meet only those planners who come recommended and follow at least a certain code of ethics. Meet with them and ask them about their experiences, qualification and specialization. Make sure that they understand your problems and what you expect from them.

1. According to the passage, when people have plans for their money, ----.

- A) they usually invest their money in market shares
- B) they may require a financial planner
- C) a financial planner's role is a worthy one
- D) they should be helped to handle their decisions smartly
- E) they should focus on the planner's experiences

2. It is stated in the passage that people around us ----.

- A) should be asked if we need a financial planner
- B) can understand our problems about investments
- C) should have certain code of ethics
- D) are young entrepreneurs investing money
- E) should be choose carefully

3. A financial planner ----.

- A) doesn't always have time to keep an eye on a person's money
- B) is a person who achieved financial goals
- C) is needed by any person ranging from young entrepreneurs to college kids
- D) is a completely new concept to us
- E) has certain qualification and specialization

4. It is concluded from the passage that ----.

- A) a financial planner should be paid if we want to achieve our financial goals
- B) some people don't have time to keep an eye on the stock market day and night
- C) financial planning is an important aspect of our lives
- D) financial planners are usually preferred by college kids deciding on college payments
- E) everybody needs a financial planner

Post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) is an anxiety disorder that can develop after exposure to a terrifying event or ordeal. While many scientific studies focus on the molecular mechanisms for learning and memorization, scientists need to address the "unlearning" process to tackle PTSD. Researchers have discovered that a receptor for glutamate, the most prominent neurotransmitter in the central nervous system, plays a key role in the unlearning process. They made this discovery in experiments where they trained mice to fear a sound by coupling it with an electric shock to the foot. They found that if, following this fear conditioning, the mice are repeatedly exposed to the sound without the electric shock, their fear eventually subsides. However, mutant mice lacking the gene-coding for metabotropic glutamate receptor 5 (mGluR5) are unable to shake off their fear of the now harmless sound. The researchers believe that a similar mechanism might be perturbed in PTSD sufferers and that metabotropic glutamate receptor 5 (mGluR5) may provide a potential target for new therapeutic treatment.

1. It can be understood from the passage that mGluR5 ----.

- A) might disturb PTSD sufferers' learning mechanisms
- B) is essential in unlearning a previously-acquired behaviour
- C) makes mutant mice unable to overcome learned fears
- D) prevents PTSD sufferers from carrying out tasks like memorization
- E) is often activated through conditioning

2. It is clear from the passage that PTSD ----.

- A) hinders learning and memorization
- B) often results in partial memory loss
- C) results from changes in molecular mechanisms
- D) may result from a traumatic experience
- E) gives rise to terrible events or ordeals

3. According to the passage, scientists can deal with PTSD ----.

- A) by attending to the unlearning process
- B) if they focus more on learning and memorization
- C) unless they tackle their terrifying experiences that cause it
- D) in case they address issues related to unlearning
- E) through the deactivation of mGluR5
